Reading Works, in partnership with the Harris Literacy Program at Wayne State University, hosts the annual PULSE (Practice-Based Updates for Literacy Strategies and Education) interactive forum for practitioners in the field of adult literacy.

Each year we bring local and national experts together with literacy providers from across and beyond Michigan to strategize how to improve and expand fundamental adult education skills. Our goal for this full-day conference is to offer an affordable day of quality education and training on current, proven methods for moving adults to reading proficiency.

Your sponsorship to PULSE supports training for more than 120 professionals including nonprofit leaders, tutors, and teachers from private organizations and public schools throughout the state and region. These professionals in turn serve an estimated 5,000 – 10,000 adult learners every year, moving them toward reading proficiency and high school completion.

One in three adults in Michigan do not read above the fifth grade level, creating a barrier to jobs and family well-being. You can help these men and women greatly improve their lives - and their children's future - with your support today.

To be recognized in the PULSE printed materials, we must receive your commitment 10/6/17.
